JACK, est un mot fort commun en Angleterre, & dont on appelle cent choses.

Premièrement Jack passe pour un diminutif de John, (cd. Jean) & marque du mépris ou de la familiarité.

Jack would be a Gentleman if he could but speak French, Janot seroit Gentilhomme s'il savoit parler François.

Ce dire passa en Proverbe du tems de Guillaume le Conquerant, qui de Duc de Normandie s'étant fait Roy d'Angleterre par la force de ses Armes y voulut introduire non seulement les Coutumes, mais la Langue même des Normands.

Si bien que le François étoit tout à fait de royaume en ce tems là dans le Royaume d'Angleterre, cela fit naître ce Proverbe, qui fait beaucoup d'honneur à notre Langue.

On s'en sert mêmes aujourd'hui, veu que la plupart de la Noblesse Angloise s'applique à cette Langue avec autant d'attachement & d'émulation qu'on le puisse par ces trois motifs, la Curiosité, l'Intérêt, ou l'Ambition.

De là vient que le Peuple mêmes, qui n'a pas beaucoup d'affection pour les François, en a de reste pour leur Langue.

To be Jack on both sides, i. e. to be a Turn-Coach, être un Tourne-Casaque, être tantôt d'un Parti, tantôt d'un autre.

Jack an Apes, C'est une injure, ou une parole outrageuse, dont on se sert fort souvent en Angleterre, comme qui traiteroit quelqu'un de Cinge en François.

Jack-sprat, or Jack-a-Dandy, est une autre injure Angloise, qui signifie à peu près un jeune sot.

Temoins le Proverbe, Jack-sprat would teach his Grandame, ce jeune sot voudroit instruire sa Grand-mère.

A Jack-pudding, un sot, un bouffon de Theatre.

More know Jack-pudding than Jack-pudding knows, plus de gens connoissent un sot qu'un sot ne connoit de gens.

Ce Proverbe fut heureusement appliqué à un homme vain, qui passant les Rues de Londres dans un Carrosse remarqua que plusieurs personnes le saluoient que lui ne connoissoit pas. Il fut ravi cependant dans la pensée qu'il avoit d'être connu de tant de monde.

Il témoigna mêmes d'en être surpris à quelqu'un de la Compagnie, qui lui répondit sèchement, Ne saluez vous pas le Proverbe.

More know Jack-pudding than Jack-pudding knows?
